HOW THE SOROS MACHINE DIRECTS & CONTROLS PROSECUTORS ACROSS AMERICA TO IMPLEMENT HIS LEFTIST AGENDA

By Tim Kilcullen, Joseph Vazquez, Tom Olohan and Dan Schneider

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Controversial leftist billionaire George Soros and his son Alex have worked tirelessly to undermine law and order in America. The Media Research Center has obtained thousands of never-before-seen internal communications from dozens of Soros prosecutors in response to public records requests. These documents reveal how the Soros machine effectively employs an army of radicalized government lawyers to tear apart the justice system. The result is a crumbling legal system where laws are openly defied by the very people who are paid to enforce them.

- MRC Uncovered 7,785 Pages of Internal Communications from Dozens of Soros-Backed Prosecutors:
The 7,785 pages of internal documents show a shocking level of control by the Soros-funded groups over the prosecutors. The Soros machine sets their policies and priorities, staffs their offices with hand-picked leftists, dictates media narratives, lobbies government officials and perverts the American justice system.
- Soros Invested at Least $117 Million to Install, Direct and Control 126 Radicalized Prosecutors:
The Soros empire spent at least $40 million to elect its prosecutors. It then invested an additional $77,663,316 to 20 leftist nonprofits to coordinate and control the prosecutors, bringing the total Soros spending to at least $117,663,316.
- The Sorosos Are America's Top Cops:
At least 30 percent of the U.S. population currently lives under the boot of the Soros prosecutors who were pressured to sign pledges vowing to adhere to various Soros priorities. The Soros machine orchestrated 33 of these "joint statements" and pledges, which were signed by 123 of the 126 Soros prosecutors.
- The Soros Machine Sets Policies and Priorities, Including Colluding to Break the Law:
Soros-funded groups set the political agenda for the prosecutors, incentivizing them to target police and the left's political opponents while pushing them not to enforce certain laws, constituting an unlawful "prosecutorial veto" of duly established laws.
- The Soros Machine Held at Least 51 Meetings with Prosecutors:
Soros-funded groups like Fair and Just Prosecution (FJP), the Vera Institute, the Prosecutors Alliance of California and the Anti-Defamation League organized at least 51 meetings (sometimes making them "mandatory") to coordinate the Soros prosecutors.

Recommendations:

MRC has several recommendations for how media outlets and elected officials can better address how George and Alex Soros use their empire against America.

- The Media Must Do a Better Job Covering Crime and Its Origins:

The Soros empire is massively involved in changing the legal system of the United States. Yet, most media outlets rarely cover Soros's "reform prosecutors" and the harm they have wrought.

- Reporters Should Do Some Genuine Journalism and Investigate the Soros Operation:

George and Alex Soros are two of the most influential figures in American and global politics. Yet, the legacy media coverage of their operations is scant.

- Congress Needs to Get Involved:

Since the Biden-Harris administration will not take action, Congress must investigate how the Soros empire wields power over prosecutors. The Senate should also refuse to confirm any additional nominees to the DOJ or the Federal bench until legal action is taken against the Soros machine.

- Governors and State Attorneys General Need to Get Involved:

Governors and state attorneys general should remove law-breaking prosecutors. Where appropriate, AGs should also bring RICO-like charges against the Soros machine and its prosecutors.

- Private attorneys and other individuals must get involved, too:

Because the Soros prosecutors have violated numerous laws and ethics rules, complaints can and should be filed with the appropriate bar associations.

HOW THE SOROS MACHINE DIRECTS & CONTROLS PROSECUTORS ACROSS AMERICA TO IMPLEMENT HIS LEFTIST AGENDA

By Tim Kilcullen, Joseph Vazquez, Tom Olohan and Dan Schneider

INTRODUCTION

Few statements have summarized the enormous damage that prosecutors backed by leftist billionaire George Soros have inflicted on Americans like grieving mother Madeline Brame's during the 2024 Republican National Convention. Brame is the mother of slain Afghanistan war veteran Sgt. Hason Correa, who was murdered in New York City. She was denied justice for her son's death due to leftist Manhattan District Attorney Alvin Bragg's "soft-on-crime" policies.

Sadly, Brame is just one of the many Americans across the United States who have suffered as a result of prosecutors doing the bidding of the Soros empire, and its dark control over the legal system has been nothing short of destructive.

Soros has spent years distorting America's concept of law and order, which is key to realizing his extreme, open society agenda. That monumental effort is now being spearheaded by his "more political" son Alex. The elder Soros poured a fortune into electing extremist prosecutors. Father and son then funded a command-and-control operation of organizations to coordinate those they supported as well as other radical prosecutors they selected, controlling them by proxy.

In all, there are a total of 126 Soros prosecutors. They include those who were supported by election-related expenditures by Soros groups, those who attended secret Soros meetings (referred to as "convenings") and those who signed pledges vowing to adhere to various Soros priorities.

MRC Business's final Special Report in its three-part series on the Soros empire exposes the dark groups of Soros-tied entities and the prosecutors wreaking havoc across the nation. Politico reported in 2016 that Soros was engaged in a scheme to "quietly overhaul the U.S. justice system" while other major donors were too fixated on the presidential and congressional races at the time. It's been nearly eight years, and Americans see the direct result – whether it's spikes in urban crime or a concerted effort not to enforce laws that oppose the Soros agenda.

The MRC went through a massive undertaking to report on how this was done. MRC obtained an incredible 7,785 pages of never-before-revealed documents (emails, text messages, correspondence, etc.) through multiple public records requests. Those documents exposed an elaborate system in which prominent Soros-backed district and state attorneys have been directed by Soros-backed groups to ignore laws that don't comport with their leftist politics. One DA was so convinced of the prosecutors collective righteousness that she described the prosecutors involved as the “Justice League,” a term ripped right from comic book superheroes.

The elder Soros has spearheaded this powerful effort. He even expressed his commitment to continue transforming the American criminal justice system when he wrote a July 2022 op-ed for The Wall Street Journal boasting that he would continue his “support” for “reform-minded prosecutors” despite growing criticism. “I have supported the election (and more recently the re-election) of prosecutors who support reform,” Soros wrote. “I have no intention of stopping.” He means it.

George Soros poured a whopping \$40 million into at least 75 district attorneys races across the country as of January 2023 to ensure that his lawfare agenda had teeth behind it. MRC Business research also discovered that he doled out an additional $77,663,316 between 2016 and 2022 directed to a collection of 20 leftist nonprofits and educational institutions. Those nonprofits and educational institutions are tied to the FJP network and handle everything from setting policies and priorities for the prosecutors, to providing public relations, recruiting and placing office staff.

In total, both Soros’s political expenditures and advocacy spending toward reshaping the American criminal justice system add up to at least $117,663,316.

The documents MRC gathered exposed how Soros groups directed Soros prosecutors to manipulate the rule of law concerning illegal immigration, drugs, abortion, election integrity, capital punishment and laws against childhood sex changes. The little-known group orchestrating the effort among Soros-backed prosecutors is Fair and Just Prosecution (FJP), a radical, soft-on-crime project of the heavily Soros-financed Tides Center. FJP held at least 51 private meetings and published 33 formal statements and pledges that contained signatures from prosecutors within its network between 2021 and 2022 alone.

It kept a tight rein on its prosecutors. For just one Soros-backed prosecutor, former San Francisco District Attorney Chesa Boudin, MRC gathered a remarkable 508 communications (emails, virtual meetings, in-person conversations, etc.) between Boudin's office and FJP in just an 18-month period (Jan. 1, 2021, to July 8, 2022). That averages out to at least one communication each day.

One of the most damning examples in the documents MRC obtained involved five Soros and FJP-backed prosecutors in Texas who worked so closely together that they created a shared group chat to strategize on refusing to enforce statutes that ran afoul of their left-wing politics. The Five, who together represented over seven million Texans, also coordinated strategies to undermine their political opponents, such as Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton (R).

The immense haul of documents MRC obtained on FJP revealed that the group extensively coordinated meetings with Soros prosecutors in several states, including prominent liberal strongholds in Texas, California and New York, to dictate radical policy positions.

The most notable of the FJP-affiliated prosecutors is Bragg, who's been at the forefront of a highly politicized, legal vendetta against former president Donald Trump. He eventually succeeded, getting a Manhattan jury to convict the former president on dubious grounds.

This is exactly the kind of power the Soros legal machine is able to exercise to achieve its political ends. Targeting Trump was in keeping with the Soros agenda. FJP declared that it was out to hold Trump "accountable" for the events of Jan. 6, 2021, in a formal statement. Bragg's immediate predecessor Cyrus Vance was a signatory to the FJP statement. In other words, FJP set the legal vendetta against Trump, and Bragg — who is also tied to FJP — saw it through.

Scandals have consistently plagued at least 13 Soros prosecutors throughout their tenures, and several have lost their jobs. In one case, Florida Governor Ron DeSantis (R) suspended former Soros-backed Orange and Osceola County State Attorney Monique Worrell for "neglect of duty" and "incompetence" for placing strict limits on charges for child pornography violations.

This is just the tip of the iceberg of the kind of radical ideas and policies pushed by Soros-tied prosecutors with the FJP at the helm. Below is a detailed account of what the MRC uncovered.

1 Soros & the Prosecutors: How They Coordinate

George and Alex Soros use prosecutors to silence their political opponents and incentivize criminality. They have two ways to do this — coordination and control. For coordination, the duo and their groups enable the prosecutors to collude and synchronize their activities to maximize their effectiveness. For control, the Soros groups dictate policy to the prosecutors, protecting those who follow orders and punishing those who act independently.

Soros Uses an Interconnected Network of Groups to Orchestrate His Prosecutors

Soros-backed prosecutors are united behind a far-left, anti-American agenda. This unity is part of a deliberate, detailed strategy imposed by a few powerful Soros groups. On over 50 occasions, these groups have ordered private “convenings” of Soros-backed prosecutors. This is part of a vast and interconnected initiative involving dozens of groups and spearheaded by the Soros organizations Fair & Just Prosecution and Vera Institute for Justice.

Founded shortly after Trump’s election, Fair & Just Prosecution (FJP) pledges to unite “elected local prosecutors as part of a network of leaders committed to promoting a justice system grounded in fairness [and] equity.” A “fiscally-sponsored project of The Tides Center,” FJP was given additional funds by Soros’s Open Society Foundations (OSF).

FJP created a “network” of prosecutors whose public and private actions it directed. While sometimes this coordination was conducted in public-facing events attended by several of the prosecutors, FJP also held at least 26 private strategy meetings — some in person, many online — with them in just 2021 and 2022.

The amount of access the prosecutors feel obligated to give FJP is startling. In just one 18-month period, a single Soros-backed prosecutor (then-San Francisco District Attorney Chesa Boudin) had over 500 email communications and eight face-to-face meetings with FJP, meaning the group averaged at least one interaction with him every single work day.

FJP gives some of Soros’s most valuable prosecutors prominent leadership positions. Three Soros-backed district attorneys (DAs) — Satana DeBerry, Parisa Dehghani-Tafti and George Gascon — and former District of Columbia Attorney General (AG) Karl Racine sit on FJP’s seven-person advisory board. Over 40 prosecutors — including Bragg — are part of its network, taking their orders from the group’s director, Miriam Krinsky.

Miriam Krinsky (center, in grey mask) and several of Soros’s prosecutors, including Diana Becton, Buta Biberaj, Alvin Bragg, Satana DeBerry, Parisa Dehghani-Tafti, Steve Descano, George Gascon, Mark Gonzalez, Beth McCann and Mike Schmidt.

A steadfast partner of FJP, the Vera Institute of Justice (along with its political action committee) has received a staggering $11 million from OSF. The Vera Institute also organized its own private meetings of prosecutors, with the invite list almost entirely populated by FJP network members like DeBerry and Cook County DA Kim Foxx. Four of the five documented meetings were exclusive to “Black Women.”

Another “[p]roject of Tides Advocacy,” the Prosecutors Alliance of California, also coordinates extensively with FJP to dictate prosecutor policy. Created by four Soros-backed prosecutors (and later joined by a fifth), the Prosecutors Alliance organized 20 private meetings of its own to “draft and advocate on behalf of legislative proposals and local policies.” The Soros-backed prosecutors in the Prosecutors Alliance currently oversee the DA offices for more than 13 million people.

Soros Group Provided Invaluable Political Consulting for Soros Prosecutors

There is a reason Soros prosecutors allow themselves to be dominated by Soros-backed groups like FJP and the Vera Institute. Being a Soros prosecutor means extensive, free access to expert political consulting firms, complete with detailed polling and field-tested messaging strategies. FJP remains in the driver seat, though, even going so far as to draft social media posts for its prosecutors so they can better coordinate their messaging.

FJP worked with the political consulting firm Safer Cities to poll-test different messaging strategies on hot-button issues like crime and then deliver these findings to its trusted prosecutors.

In October 2021, for example, FJP hosted Safer Cities for a prosecutors-only meeting to explain “How Prosecutors Should Respond To Fear-Mongering on Murder, Drugs, and Bail Reform,” with Safer Cities suggesting that polls indicated voters responded to the argument that the prosecutors wanted to “Reprioritize Resources” and “Solve More Murders.” Just four months later, FJP again hosted Safer Cities for an exclusive-to-prosecutors meeting on responding to “the media-driven fear narratives around shoplifting.”

Even when FJP was unable to bring the Safer Cities consultants for an interactive meeting, it still sent the prosecutors the firm’s latest research and data-driven survey results. Most of the emails were messaging advice, such as one 2021 correspondence describing a “poll [which] found that public officials under fire should highlight how their critics are pointing fingers to distract from the problem.”

Sometimes, FJP relayed to the prosecutors Safer Cities polling what they should say — and not say — on controversial issues like “retail theft.” FJP explained that while it understood the temptation for the prosecutors to try and blame crime on systemic issues beyond their control, Safer Cities “found that the most persuasive message was a straightforward response promising accountability.”

FJP shared Safer Cities polling not just to influence the prosecutors’ messaging, but their policy, too. In November 2021, FJP also claimed Safer Cities polling showed “a majority of voters (68%) favor medical professional responders over police as a response to mental health and homelessness calls,” one of the priorities of the Defund the Police movement.

FJP encouraged prosecutors to work closely with Safer Cities, in effect urging public officials to deploy a private firm for public relations, marketing and polling. “Please let us know of any messages you would like to test,” Krinsky wrote to the network in March of 2022, saying “[T]he team at Safer Cities are eager for your suggestions and open to potentially working with some of you and your jurisdictions.”

The Safer Cities/FJP alliance ran deep. One of the leaders of Safer Cities is political consultant Tracy Schmalder, a former Department of Justice official who FJP listed as “Staff” and Krinsky referred to as “our extraordinary management and communications exper[t]” and “our communications favorite.”

In FJP’s meetings, Schmalder presented research and advice, sometimes on behalf of Safer Cities, other times credited to other consulting firms. She explained the intricacies of op-ed placement, giving the Soros network insider editing tips. She was cited in at least 19 emails FJP sent its network in a single 18-month period. Schmalder also joined the prosecutor meetings to provide messaging advice on at least eight separate occasions.

Each year, Schmalder joined FJP for a Newly Elected Transition Strategies (NETS) meeting where veteran prosecutors would explain to newly elected attorneys how to prepare for their new position. For the 2021 meeting, held in Los Angeles County DA George Gascon’s office, Krinsky and Schmalder led then DA-elect Bragg in a conversation with Deberry, Dehghani-Tafti, and Racine to teach them the right way to remove the “barriers” preventing them from achieving their mission.

On 20 different occasions, FJP sent the prosecutors “template” press releases they were to “tailor” and then publish. FJP also gave a set list of potential tweets (posts on Twitter, now X) that the prosecutors were to “use or adapt” to promote the group. In April 2021, for example, DeKalb County DA Sherry Boston posted a message that actually copied FJP’s sample almost verbatim:

tweet and use or adapt one of these options:

1. I am grateful to be part of the @fjp_org network and to have the opportunity to learn from and engage with fellow reform-minded prosecutors like @MarilynMosbyEsq, @chesaboudin, and @parisa4justice.
2. As part of the @fjp_org network, I have the opportunity to connect with fellow elected prosecutors who are working towards a new vision of justice. Thanks to @MarilynMosbyEsq, @chesaboudin, and @parisa4justice for sharing the power of this movement.

Four years ago, many thought of reform-minded elected prosecutors as a flash in the pan. Yet, what started out as a handful of change agents has grown into a movement that has become the new normal in prosecution.

DeKalb County District Attorney Sherry Boston posted a message that copied FJP's sample almost verbatim.

FJP Built Connections Between Prosecutors and Establishment Media

Due to poll-tested findings by its high-value consultants, FJP prioritized getting the Soros prosecutors' favorable media coverage, and worked with them to build their standing with media outlets, ordinarily a job for paid communications staff. FJP would place — and sometimes co-author — prosecutors' op-eds, boost positive news stories about them and host networking events with friendly reporters.

Schmalzer and her polling data were the driving forces behind FJP prioritizing op-ed placement with legacy media. Specifically highlighting an op-ed Krinsky wrote for USA Today with Racine, Schmalzer emphasized that "op-eds" were one of the most effective messaging tools to "change people's minds in a lasting way." At multiple meetings, Schmalzer explained to the prosecutors the intricacies and minutia of effective op-ed placement.

In July 2021, FJP held "A Conversation with Journalists" with representatives from major outlets like The Washington Post and The Los Angeles Times. Prosecutors were taught by media figures "[h]ow to engage and work with journalists."

The Post was represented by Justin Jouvenal, who has on at least two separate occasions written positively about George Soros's spending in competitive Virginia prosecutorial elections. Also speaking was David Plotz, the former editor-in-chief of Slate magazine, who once wrote, "American politics is a broken horror, particularly at the national level, not because politicians are too dirty, but because they're not nearly dirty enough."

Justin Jouvenal, a Washington Post writer who covered Soros' spending in Virginia Commonwealth's attorney races, privately consulted with Soros prosecutors on how to shape their media coverage.

On at least eight occasions, FJP touted opinion pieces Krinsky wrote with an elected prosecutor that were published by legacy media outlets. These included:

- A December 2020 CNN op-ed by Krinsky and Racine complaining that "85% of US attorneys are White men,"
- A May 2021 USA Today op-ed she co-wrote demanding President Joe Biden order immigration authorities not to work with local police and,
- A Davis Vanguard op-ed with then-Florida 13th

Circuit State Attorney Andrew Warren claiming a Florida statute, which fined election supervisors who didn't monitor ballot drop boxes, was akin to "Jim Crow era" laws.

FJP also highlighted to its network a piece by Bragg and the leader of a separate Soros group, the New York Immigration Coalition (recipient of $100,000 from OSF). In the op-ed, Bragg urged New York Governor Kathy Hochul (D) to "prohibit state and local officers from enforcing federal immigration laws" or even interacting with federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE).

Krinsky also appeared at high-profile, private media events to promote those in her network. One such instance was a four-person panel at the Center on Media, Crime and Justice at the City University of New York (CUNY) featuring Boudin, Krinsky, Milwaukee County DA John Chisholm (who is also Soros-backed) and Darcy Covert, a Seattle activist who contended that there should be no local criminal prosecution of any kind in America. The panel's organizer boasted privately to the four that "the primary target of these conferences" was "journalists," and "[o]ver 50 journalists from around the country" would be attending the exclusive event.

FJP also made sure to boost its network prosecutors by arranging favorable stories about them in legacy media outlets. In June 2021, for example, FJP asked Boudin to be credited as the writer of a "[p]roposed op ed" (actually written by FJP) arguing that Philadelphia County DA Larry Krasner's recent reelection demonstrated "[c]ommunities are rejecting the fear-based narratives" of "police unions."

Media Campaigns Featured A-List Disney and HBO Stars ... and Convicted Terrorists

The Soros Family is not effective if its prosecutors are not popular enough to stay in office. To maintain their image, FJP and similar groups have financed distribution of glossy documentaries and podcasts touting prosecutors they support. Disturbingly, these high-budget productions and their extensive distributions were partially financed by the U.S. taxpayers. Even more disturbingly, they also feature terrorists.

FJP impressed prosecutors to promote the documentaries of studio Brave New Films, which has received \$905,000 from OSF and is a formal partner of the censorship group Media Matters. FJP hosted its own promotional event with Deborah Gonzalez for the documentary Racially Charged, narrated by Oscar-winning actor and Disney star Mahershala Ali.

Brave New Films then produced the documentary Beyond Bars, championing the life and work of Boudin. Also featured was Boudin's father, David Gilbert, a "domestic terrorist" convicted of triple murder (two of the victims were police officers). Brave New Films celebrated Gilbert for his "lifetime of commitment to those struggling against domination, exploitation and abuse." The documentary also featured and praised Bill Ayers, Boudin's childhood guardian and founder of the terror group Weather Underground.

The Independent Television Service (ITVS), a project of the taxpayer-funded Corporation for Public Broadcasting, the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) and PBS, went even further. Prior to her resignation and disbarment, Soros DA-turned-Soros U.S. Attorney Rachel Rollins sat on ITVS's advisory board. Using her position, she encouraged the ITVS to create an eight-part documentary miniseries titled Philly D.A., a hagiography on Krasner featuring Foxx. Philly D.A. was picked up by PBS for distribution, with the first episode dropping in April 2021.

FJP aggressively promoted the series. It reached out to its Soros network prosecutors, sharing pre-release copies of the film and asking them to host “screening events ... in as many places as possible to show community members the power and influence of local prosecutors.” One DA private screening event FJP hosted featured a panel with Krasner, Deberry and the series’s director; another, featuring Krinsky and co-hosted by ITVS, featured speeches from U.S. Senator Tina Smith (D-MN) and then-Congressman Fred Upton (R-MI). FJP even helped PBS create focus groups with the prosecutors to “evaluate the reach and impact” of the series.

Separately, FJP recruited Deberry for an audio documentary series on their offices from HBO star Jay Ellis. The series, The Untold Story: Policing, was distributed by the for-profit Lemonada Media, but was a project of the activist group We The Protesters. We The Protesters’s creator and president is Black Lives Matter (BLM) founder DeRay Mckesson, a professional activist currently being sued for allegedly orchestrating the riot that permanently disabled a Baton Rouge, Louisiana, police officer.

George and Alex Soros Enable the Prosecutors to Censor Their Political Opponents

Soros groups work fist-in-glove with prosecutors to implement Soros’s policies. Unfortunately, since these prosecutors are far left, their policies are often about censorship and control.

The Prosecutors Alliance relentlessly pressed its prosecutor members to push for a police censorship bill, which would have mandated that elected prosecutors who accept campaign contributions from organizations supporting law enforcement (including unions) give up their authority to prosecute police officers.

In California, the so-called “progressive prosecutors” for “police accountability” are overwhelmingly funded by a tiny handful of mega-donors, such as Meta power couple Mike and Kaitlyn Krieger. Had the censorship bill been enacted, police would effectively have been forbidden from using their own money for political advocacy against the millions in propaganda against them.

The four founding elected prosecutors of the Prosecutors

Alliance were all Soros-backed — Boudin, Gascon, then-Contra Costa County DA Diana Becton and then-San Joaquin County DA Tori Verber Salazar. They had been focused on censoring police officers for years, collaborating to advocate for such policies prior to even starting the Prosecutors Alliance. FJP promoted the California Senate’s passage of the act, acknowledging legislators did so due to the “invaluable support” and lobbying push of the Prosecutors Alliance, and Boudin in particular.

The censorship bill stalled in the House and was not enacted. The Prosecutors Alliance then harangued the state bar association to impose speech restrictions.

Another leftist censorship group FJP connected its prosecutors with was the far-left Anti-Defamation League (ADL), which has received $203,120 from the Soros-connected Tides Foundation. For one of their private meetings for prosecutors, FJP hosted ADL Vice President for Law Enforcement Gregory Ehrie to discuss ways the prosecutors could incorporate ADL “resources” into their prosecutions.

The ADL boasts that it works with law enforcement personnel and officials to “educate” them on “extremism” and “online hate.” Online hate, as the ADL categorizes it, though, includes people who merely oppose left-wing violence. The organization has gone so far as to claim that any “Anti-Antifa Images” criticizing the violent anarchist group Antifa are “hate symbols” for “white supremacists.”

The Soros group ADL lists “Anti-Antifa Images” as hate symbols in its “Glossary of Extremism and Hate.”

Another Soros group that works with FJP to control the prosecutors is the American Constitution Society (ACS), designed as a leftist equivalent to the Federalist Society. ACS has received over $5.8 million from OSF.

ACS's president is former Senator Russ Feingold (D-WI), namesake of a sweeping censorship bill he authored that was later found to be unconstitutional. Krinsky is a devoted associate of Feingold, repeatedly urging her prosecutors to read his anti-Trump opinion pieces.

In early 2022, FJP and the ACS teamed up to conduct a seminar "about the role prosecutors can play in bringing an end to the death penalty in the United States." The seminar was hosted by Elizabeth Bruenig, a former assistant editor of The Washington Post and featured Parisa Dehghani-Tafti, then-King County PA Dan Satterberg and the executive director of the Death Penalty Information Center, an organization which itself received $600,000 from OSF.

Soros Prosecutors Work with Soros Groups to Lobby Other Branches of Government

The Soros prosecutors are a tool the Soros groups use to lobby other branches of government, targeting officials as prominent as California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) and even former U.S. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-CA).

CALIFORNIA

The Prosecutors Alliance has lobbied several California officials on at least seven proposed statutes, pushing the state to end capital punishment and sharply limit cash bail. The Prosecutors Alliance has far more sway than a typical advocacy outlet, repeatedly meeting with high-ranking officials like Senator Pro Tempore Toni Atkins and Newsom to push its agenda.

Newsom's close relationship with the Prosecutors Alliance is unsurprising. The Soros group's co-founder and executive director is former Marin County politician Christine Soto DeBerry, who was previously Newsom's deputy chief of staff. Newsom and the Prosecutors Alliance held a private meeting just 11 days after Biden's inauguration, and the governor's image remains plastered across the Prosecutors Alliance website.

Newsom may have gotten more than political support from his cozy relationship with Soros prosecutors. Boudin did not indict Newsom after the governor was caught violating his own COVID-19 health orders at a luxury French restaurant in San Francisco, and personally campaigned for him when frustrated citizens demanded a recall election.

Soros groups also lobbied federal officials in California, with FJP and the Vera Institute attempting to get Boudin to join them in pressuring then-Speaker of the U.S. House Pelosi to support soft-on-fentanyl dealer legislation.

VIRGINIA

In 2021, FJP held a private network meeting so the Prosecutors Alliance could tout its success ... and to announce a similar group on the other side of the country. Virginia Progressive Prosecutors for Justice (VPPJ) is, in effect, an East Coast version of the Prosecutors Alliance. At least six Soros-backed Commonwealth's attorneys (CAs), including Parisa Dehghani-Tafti of Arlington County and Steve Descano of Fairfax County, served or continue to serve in the group.

Much like its Golden State counterpart, VPPJ boasts that it has "successfully [lobbied] the state legislature in support of a series of criminal justice reform bills." These new laws prohibited police from investigating seemingly intoxicated drivers even when they could smell marijuana, mandated law enforcement officers undergo racist DEI training and eliminated capital punishment.

FJP celebrated the VPPJ's success to its network, claiming it helped end "racial terror." VPPJ, however, had demanded even more of the legislature, urging for "meaningful systemic change" and sweeping new "discretionary powers" for prosecutors.

TEXAS

The Soros groups lobbying state officials were not always formal, blue-state institutions like the Prosecutors Alliance or VPPJ. Arguably the most powerful state-level Soros group was an informal cabal of Soros-backed prosecutors in the Lone Star State: The Texas Five.

The Texas Five are Dallas County DA John Creuzot, Travis County DA Jose Garza, Bexar County DA Joe Gonzales, Nueces County DA Mark Gonzalez and Fort Bend County DA Brian Middleton. These five Soros-backed Texas attorneys together represented over 7 million people, and all but Gonzalez remain in office today. The Texas Five worked so closely that they created a shared group chat in which to strategize and commiserate about their political opponents, like AG Ken Paxton.

Creuzot, Gonzales, Gonzalez and Middleton teamed up with the Texas Organizing Project (TOP) to lobby the legislature against a bill to strengthen security measures around mail-in balloting. TOP is another Soros group — which, together with its affiliated Education Fund, has received over $2.2 million from OSF.

FJP, TOP and the Vera Institute all collaborated with the Texas Five and coordinated with all three Soros organizing groups on Texas-specific issues. Garza, though, went further, colluding directly with OSF via email, text and even face-to-face meetings. Sometimes, Garza and OSF discussed immediate policy issues like gun confiscation and union support. On other occasions, Garza met with OSF executives to "brainstorm other connections" to create in the progressive prosecutor movement.

Soros and FJP Use Prosecutors to Target Political Opponents, Beginning with Police

Soros and his groups are soft-on-crime, but they do believe in prosecution of political opponents — especially police and opponents like Trump. On at least 12 separate occasions, FJP sent out celebratory emails when one of their network prosecutors indicted or convicted a police officer. FJP implied the indictment race was some sort of competition, rejoicing that "in the last 18 months, [George Gascon's] office has charged 19 police officers."

FJP was so impressed with Gascon's ability to target police that the group had him give an in-person presentation to the network titled "Enhancing Police Accountability."

At least one of the indictments FJP celebrated was found to be baseless. Boudin indicted former-San Francisco police officer Chris Samayoa for murder, even though he had not been charged by his predecessor. After Boudin's recall, a California judge dismissed the charges against Samayoa. AG Rob Bonta (a staunch leftist, but not a member of the Soros network) formally concluded that the "charges against Samayoa could not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt" and a jury would likely find the officer's actions "necessary" for "self-defense."

FJP was enthusiastic about Boudin's decision to charge Samayoa. For example, shortly after the charges were announced, FJP wrote the DA: "Thank you for taking this important step towards a fair justice system in San Francisco and beyond." FJP added that it had drafted a celebratory Facebook post and invited Boudin to share it.

In a private one-on-one meeting between Krinsky and Boudin, which FJP transcribed, Krinsky crooned that it was an "important" and "historic moment" when the DA "filed homicide charges against a police officer [Samayoa]." FJP then touted an op-ed Boudin had written where (according to Krinsky) he explained that prosecutors “must hold police officers accountable.”

FJP’s support for attempting to imprison Samoya is especially disturbing considering the group sent out a celebratory email when then-New York Governor Andrew Cuomo used his executive power to release Boudin’s cop-killer father Gilbert early.

Chesa,

I wanted to let you know that our Facebook post today highlights your recent announcement of charges against the police officer who fatally shot Keita O’Neil. Thank you for taking this important step towards a fair justice system in San Francisco and beyond.

In case you would like to share, the post can be found here.

Best,
 Nisa

Biden-Harris Administration the Most Powerful Group Working with Soros and His Prosecutors

Soros groups like FJP and the Vera Institute are not just partnering with private and state-level entities. They have successfully embedded their lawyers in the Biden-Harris administration, and are using this leverage to steer American tax dollars to Soros-backed prosecutors.

For one of its 2021 private prosecutor meetings, FJP hosted then-Deputy Associate AG of the United States Theron Pride, Jr. “to discuss federal funding opportunities and priorities and how those can be leveraged to support reform-minded prosecutors and the[ir] important work.” Pride oversaw the distribution of over $5 billion in Department of Justice grants before departing to run the Center for Court Innovation, which has received $200,000 from OSF.

Joining Pride to meet with FJP and the prosecutors was Kristen Mahoney, who at that time was the acting director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA). In its own words, the BJA is “the leading source of federal justice funding to state and local jurisdiction.” Prior to joining the Biden administration, Mahoney worked at the Vera Institute.

In an announcement email sent to prosecutors a few months after the meeting with Pride and Mahoney, Krinsky touted five network members who had received grants from the BJA: Creuzot, Krasner, Lake County State’s Attorney (SA) Eric Rinehart, Chatham County DA Shalena Cook Jones and Franklin County Prosecuting Attorney (PA) Gary Tyack.

FJP Covered Costs of Lavish Trips to Teach ‘German Approach’ to Criminal Justice

If FJP’s actions often seem un-American, it is because they are — literally. FJP instructed prosecutors to emulate Germany’s censorship-friendly, civil law justice system, and it enticed them to do so by offering lavish junkets across the country and the world.

FJP hosted Olaf Stürzebecher, a German government official and former executive at the left-wing Sodzia Foundation, to teach the prosecutors “about the German approach” to criminal justice. This followed an “international learning trip” that FJP took with 20 elected prosecutors — including Krasner and St. Louis County PA Wesley Bell — to Berlin.

Krinsky and several Soros prosecutors smile outside the infamous Wannasee villa where SS officer Reinhard Heydrich first unveiled Adolf Hitler’s “Final Solution” to Nazi high command.

In a public statement, FJP gushed: “Germany now diverts almost all people away from prison” and “places human dignity at the center of its correctional philosophy.” Germany’s socialist government recently decriminalized possession of child pornography, but upheld the conviction of an opposition party leader for posting the government’s official crime statistics on social media.

FJP paid for several lavish trips for its prosecutors. Often, this was for FJP-hosted meetings in U.S. cities like Los Angeles, Seattle and New York. Sometimes, though, FJP financed the prosecutors’ “learning” trips to European nations it admired like Portugal and, of course, Germany. Some of the prosecutors, such as Boudin and (reportedly) Warren, chose to use taxpayer money for some of the trips instead of accepting FJP’s gifts.

FJP’s Hostility Toward Trump Supporters Is So Strong, It Directed a Prosecutor Investigating the Former President to Abandon His Ethical Obligations

Soros’s FJP had such animosity for former President Donald J. Trump and supporters of his MAGA (Make America Great Again) movement that it crossed a serious ethical boundary in Trump’s New York criminal case.

In a formal 2021 statement, FJP declared “President Trump and his supporters have repeatedly incited violence and perpetuated conspiracy theories with devastating consequences [emphasis added].” Over sixty elected prosecutors joined this statement, including Gascon, Descano and the Texas Five.

The statement went on to claim — erroneously — that “the sitting president incited a mob to defy the results of a fair and free election in an attempted coup.” It

All,

As I’ve had the opportunity to discuss with a number of you, yesterday’s events were deeply concerning and shook us to our core on a host of levels. A number of you have opined that this is an important moment for elected prosecutors to come together and speak out as a group to condemn the assault on democracy and all those responsible for it.

With this objective in mind, we are aiming to release a short joint statement (both attached and pasted below) as quickly as possible. The statement calls out the storming of the Capitol by rioters as an attack on our democracy, calls for the perpetrators to be held accountable, highlights the clear racial bias in play in the disturbing law enforcement response and demands that elected leaders clearly and unambiguously condemn the attack and accept the result of our nation’s fair and free election. It also advocates for systemic change moving forward and calls for ongoing reform to restore integrity to the Department of Justice and the federal government as a whole. Given the fast moving nature of this issue, we are asking you to reply to us if you are willing to join this statement. ASAP and ideally by 7:30 pm ET tonight with our apologies for the quick turnaround).

If you are willing to join the statement, please reply all back to me, Hannah Raskin-Gross, Alyssa Kress, Ruby Nidiry, and Liz Komar.

As always, thank you for your time, courage, and leadership in these challenging times,
 Miriam and the FJP Team

Joint Statement on January 6, 2021 Attack on the Capitol

Excerpt from a 2021 email where Krinsky solicited signatures for an FJP pledge condemning supporters of then-President Donald J. Trump.

continued: “Our leaders must be above lying, deception, and inciting violence – and they must be held to account when those lines are crossed.”

Krinsky, on behalf of FJP, sought the signatures for the list. While Bragg (who was not yet DA) did not join this particular statement, his predecessor Cy Vance did. At that time, Vance was investigating Trump, and his research formed the backbone for Bragg’s indictment of the former president. It is hard to determine which was the greater breach of professional ethics: Krinsky (a licensed attorney) asking Vance to join such an incendiary public declaration regarding a man he was currently investigating, or Vance agreeing to do so.

2 Soros & the Prosecutors: How Soros Controls Them

FJP's chief of staff, a subordinate position to Krinsky, is Justin Kollar. Prior to serving as Krinsky's assistant, Kollar was the Kauai County Prosecuting Attorney, overseeing an area spanning 1,200 miles and four different Hawaiian islands. Despite this influential position, Kollar — who demands he be referred to using “he/they” pronouns — decided to abandon his position mid term to work under Krinsky. That such a powerful politician would choose this subordinate role is indicative of the power and influence of FJP.

These Soros groups directly control the conduct of their prosecutors, dictating their most sweeping and most intimate office policies. When the prosecutors follow the Soros groups' directions, they are rewarded. When they choose the law over the Soros machine's orders, they are removed.

Soros Groups Directed Prosecutors to Issue Statements, Make Pledges and Lobby Courts

As the lead Soros group, FJP directed the prosecutors to sign on to 33 formal statements and pledges. These statements often included formal policy commitments, and demonstrated a coordinated effort to influence public policy. Separate from these pledges, the FJP got the prosecutors to sign onto friend-of-the-court briefs lobbying both state and federal courts to pervert the law.

Each individual statement or pledge FJP created took a hard left position on political topics. FJP had its prosecutors support more restrictions on and investigations of police officers and oppose election integrity measures, capital punishment, enforcement of federal immigration law and protections for the unborn.

Most of the Soros-backed attorneys, including Bragg and Descano, participated in the FJP's formal statements and pledges. Krasner was the most dutiful servant, lending his signature 31 times.

Other Soros-backed prosecutors were part of the effort. New York Attorney General Letitia James, who received at least $20,000 from Soros between 2021-2022, joined three different FJP pledges. James is infamous for potentially costing her state millions through a politicized civil suit against Trump so extreme it was dubbed “an attack on America.”

In addition to the 33 statements and pledges, FJP submitted 38 “amicus briefs” (including one letter) to various American courts. These briefs, the legal term referring to documents explicitly lobbying courts, covered topics ranging from high-profile Supreme Court cases like Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health (deciding whether abortion is a constitutional right) to state court disputes on prosecutorial authority.

FJP's briefs would take the left's position on each subject argued. It argued there was a constitutional right to child genital mutilation or hormone injections, that federal law did not prohibit state-licensed fentanyl-injection sites and even that the Pennsylvania Supreme Court should expand criminal statutes beyond their text so as to make it easier to convict police officers.

Joining the briefs were the Soros-backed prosecutors, including Bragg and Descano. Once again, Krasner was the most prolific, joining 33 of FJP's briefs.

Though not quite reaching Krasner's levels of dedication, the Texas Five were active signatories of both FJP's pledges and briefs.

For several of the briefs, such as ones targeting police officers, FJP partnered with a group called the Law Enforcement Action Partnership (LEAP), one of the organizations that helped it and the Vera Institute lobby Pelosi. LEAP's seemingly police-friendly name lets it pretend impartiality to cover for FJP's rabid anti-police extremism. In actuality, LEAP is in fact a far more left-wing group than its name implies: It has received over $1.03 million from Soros foundations.

The Saga of the Texas Five

When Warren was removed from office in August of 2022, the official order cited FJP's work directly. The document concluded that “Warren demonstrated his incompetence and willful defiance of his duties as a state attorney. ... when he signed a ‘Joint Statement’ with

Texas Five Member	Number of FJP Statements/ Pledges Joined	Number of FJP Briefs Joined
 JOHN CREUZOT County: Dallas	24	25
 JOSE GARZA County: Travis (Includes Austin)	11	13
 JOE GONZALES County: Bexar (Includes San Antonio)	23	24
 MARK GONZALEZ County: Nueces (Includes Corpus Christi)	25	30
 BRIAN MIDDLETON County: Fort Bend (Includes part of Houston)	18	21

other elected prosecutors.” It added that “although the Florida Legislature has not enacted such criminal laws, these statements prove that Warren thinks he has the authority to defy the Florida Legislature and nullify in his jurisdiction criminal laws with which he disagrees.”

Warren’s refusal to enforce hypothetical laws was enough to get him removed from office. The Texas Five, though, went further. Together, they took pledges for FJP in which they vowed not to follow existing state law. These pledges include:

- A June 2022 FJP Pledge to “refuse to prosecute those who seek, assist in or provide abortions.”
- A June 2021 FJP Pledge not to prosecute anyone for illegally giving hormone suppressants to children under the guise of “gender-affirming care.”
- An October 2020 FJP Pledge “not to enforce laws criminalizing abortion, even if the Supreme Court were to retreat from the protections of Roe v. Wade.”
- A June 2019 FJP Pledge “not to prosecute individuals” who obtain or perform unlawful abortions. This statement singled-out Texas as a state and its laws would not be enforced under this pledge.

In addition to the 2021 FJP pledge supporting child gender transition, the Texas Five released a separate joint statement condemning “Governor [Greg] Abbott and Attorney General Paxton’s cruel directives treating transgender children’s ... gender affirming care as ‘child abuse’” and “assur[ing] our residents with transgender children that they are safe to continue seeking the care their children need” regardless of Texas law.

The Texas Five crafted a glossy, white-on-black promotional piece touting their pledge to defy Governor Greg Abbott’s order restricting the genital mutilation of children.

While noteworthy, this statement was characteristic of the Texas Five, as they were particularly venomous toward Paxton. Their hatred for the three-term attorney general was apparently so strong they interrupted their workday to jointly watch a livestream of an attempt to impeach him. Creuzot boasted to the others by text that he is “elated” to see Paxton under siege.

Though Paxton was acquitted in a landslide vote by the Texas Senate, the Texas Five were successful in preventing Paxton from enforcing his state’s election laws. Creuzot, Gonzales, Gonzalez and Middleton lobbied the Texas Supreme Court to bar the attorney general from bringing any criminal election integrity case, such as prosecution of fraudulent voting, without the permission of the DA. After winning the case, Middleton emailed the others: “We Beat Paxton!!!”

In a June 2021 FJP statement, four of the prosecutors proclaimed there wasn’t “any evidence of widespread voter fraud” and that even routine ID requirements were “voter suppression laws” equivalent to those of “the Jim Crow Era.”

The Texas Five’s work on pledges and sabotaging the attorney general’s enforcement of the laws meant they were now taking orders from the Soros machine to directly contradict their oaths of office. Soros groups shielded the Texas Five from the consequences of their actions, footing their personal legal bills and helping them lobby the legislature to ignore their actions. A sixth Soros prosecutor refused to go along with this ploy, and as a result was ruthlessly targeted by the Soros machine and defeated.

The Texas Five first became alarmed at pushback for their actions in January 2023 when Gonzalez texted the other four to confess he was facing a petition to remove him from office. Garza replied that he was “sure” the petition was “bullshit,” and Gonzales blamed their mutual nemesis Paxton.

Gonzalez then revealed the petition was instead from the non-profit Country Citizens Defending Freedom (CCDF), complaining “They love desantis” (a reference to Florida Governor Ron DeSantis) and warning, “I’m sure some of y’all may be next.”

Middleton connected Gonzalez, along with Garza, to Whitney Tymas. Tymas, a former director of racial justice for the Vera Institute, was (and still is) the president of Soros’s Justice & Safety PAC. Middleton explained that Thomas had a “legal team ready” to combat the CCDF’s efforts.

The Texas Five became even more alarmed when the Texas legislature began debating “rogue prosecutor” bills that would make it easier to remove or preempt DAs who openly defied state law. Middleton raged: “Definitely right wing bullies, having a tantrum.”

The Texas Five exchange texts on providing Soros attorneys for Gonzalez’s pending removal hearing.

Creuzot became incensed that the bills were being covered in the local media. When Texas Scorecard ran a story on the issue, he derided the outlet as “a right wing nut publication” that “came after me last fall.” When told that the San Antonio Express had published an op-ed opposing the legislation, he opined: “I’d be shocked if the Dallas Morning Snooze would take that position regarding me” (a reference to The Dallas Morning News).

After reaching out to potential allies, Middleton explained there were “a number of DAs essentially saying that is what we get for signing the [FJP abortion] letter and they are willing to see us go down.” The Texas Five’s anger turned to Harris County DA Kim Ogg, who oversaw the parts of Houston that Middleton did not have jurisdiction over.

Ogg, who was also Soros-backed, had joined four FJP briefs and three FJP statements early in her tenure.

However, she had seemingly grown concerned about the group's radical direction and did not participate in any public FJP activity after her city was consumed by violent, anti-police riots in 2020.

The Texas Five exchange texts highlighting their simmering anger of Soros prosecutor Kim Ogg's refusal to join their unlawful actions.

In 2023, Gonzales reached out to Ogg because she knew a state legislator Gonzales wanted to have help them fight the "rogue prosecutor" legislation. Recounting his conversation to the Texas Five, Gonzales explained that Ogg "believes these bills are going to come fast and hard, and that every progressive prosecutor that is targeted should be prepared to defend himself including me."

Gonzales added, "She said she believes it all stems from the FJP letter where we signed on that said we would never prosecute abortion."

The Soros prosecutors then developed a strategy to recruit the Texas District & County Attorneys Association (TDCAA) to fight the effort. "Other DAs and Police need to get on board because it will impact all of us, Kim included," proclaimed Middleton. "We just need to push TDCAA. If they stand with us, it all dies."

Additionally, the Texas Five also began lobbying legislators directly, coordinating their efforts with former U.S. Congressman Pete Gallego. Gonzales even trekked to Austin to testify. Middleton messaged him: "Joe you are a giant. They talk shit but they know you can [win] elections for others."

Ominously, Middleton added: "Make sure they respect your power."

Despite their tough talk, it appears the Texas Five eventually became concerned that their ties to FJP were becoming too much of a liability. Together, they agreed to follow, as Gonzales put it, a "stay under the radar" strategy where they would not join FJP's briefs and pledges "until all this blows over." This was complicated by the fact that, for issues where the prosecutor had previously joined a brief, FJP would file new motions with their signatures unless the DA proactively opted out.

The Texas Five decided to contact FJP directly and to opt out of future briefs and pledges. Middleton appeared to express relief that Krinsky gave "no push back."

Gonzalez's legal troubles threatened to put FJP's connections to the prosecutors back into the spotlight. The day before a deposition, he messaged his four fellow prosecutors: "I didn't declare any benefit from any training or conferences I attended from Fjp [sic] on my personal financial statement. Did y'all do the same? And if so, any legal reasoning. [sic] I just anticipated getting asked."

The Texas Five discuss how to justify Mark Gonzalez's exclusion of FJP-financed trips from his financial disclosure forms.

Gonzales told Gonzalez to argue that the FJP paying for travel expenses and dining were "not considered a gift, but rather a trip in the nature of continuing legal education.” He added that the prosecutors had been able to use FJP’s training for their “CLE [bar certification] hours” and they were “ultimately attended for the purpose of benefiting the office and not [them] personally.”

Gonzalez was not able to evade his legal troubles. After his suspension, as well as a separate judicial finding of “credible evidence of gross incompetence” in his office, he resigned, ostensibly to launch a campaign for U.S. Senate. He placed third in the Democratic Party primary, receiving less than 9 percent of the vote.

The other members of the Texas Five, though, were more successful in evading responsibility for their misconduct after multiple Republican DAs joined their efforts. By the end of February, the Texas Five were celebrating that Abbott had not included the “rogue prosecutor” legislation on his “emergency list” (though they appeared upset he prioritized “bail reform”). By June, they rejoiced that the legislature was now reduced to debating legislation “very meek compared to what” had previously been proposed.

The far-left Harris County Democratic Party passed a resolution condemning Ogg as insufficiently progressive, and the Texas Organizing Project put its weight behind a primary challenger, Sean Tearre.

Tearre ran to Ogg’s left, pledging “to decriminalize low-level drug possession” regardless of Texas law. The state wing of Soros’s Justice and Safety PAC poured money into Tearre’s already “well-funded” campaign, meaning he far outspent the embattled Ogg. Ogg conceded after early voting reportedly showed her losing by over 50 points.

The Texas Five collaborated with a deep network of Soros groups to undermine, pervert and ultimately defy their own state’s law. When they received pushback, Soros groups were immediately available for legal aid. Ogg, meanwhile, left the Soros network — and was immediately disowned by her party and overcome by a wave of Soros money. These contrasting outcomes send a dark warning to prosecutors who wish to choose their oath of office over the Soros agenda.

Soros Groups Select Staff of Soros Prosecutors and Dictate Office Policies

The Soros Machine has extensive control over how prosecutors even run their offices. Soros groups are staffing AG, CA and DA offices across the country, then using their extensive resources to dictate the intimate details of the prosecutors’ office policy.

One of FJP and the Vera Institute’s deepest partnerships is the Prosecution Leaders of Now initiative. It is “an executive education opportunity in organizational leadership offered for managers and line prosecutors in DAs office” that is bestowed by the Stanford Graduate School of Business. The valuable career opportunity is meant for “emerging leaders in prosecution” who have “committed to transforming the practice of prosecution and redressing inequities in the criminal justice system.”

Naturally, FJP eagerly approached its network prosecutors to offer an inside track. It convinced Boudin, for example, to agree to send two attorneys from his office.

The Texas Five celebrate that their Soros-backed lobbying push dissuaded the Legislature from limiting their powers.

Joining FJP and the Vera Institute for the Prosecution Leaders of Now were two other Soros groups: For the People (a recipient of $400,000 from OSF that collaborated with the prosecutors in the Vera Institute’s racially exclusive meetings) and the Public Rights Project (also part of the Tides network, and recipient of over $1 million in earmarks from OSF). Also included was the Institute for Innovation in Prosecution at CUNY.

FJP also controls prosecutor staffing by selecting third-year law students and offering them “a job pathway.”

This pathway begins with them apprenticing in a prosecutor's office; FJP says its "aim" is that those "who satisfactorily complete the program will be offered a full-time, entry-level position with the office after graduation."

Even though the positions are for the prosecutorial offices rather than FJP, it is FJP that dictates which applicants get them (the prosecutors only have nominal veto power). Complicating things further, FJP urged their network to permit program members to spend half their fellowship serving defense attorneys instead of the prosecutors.

FJP has been aggressive and domineering in running the program. On at least two separate occasions, it demanded the elected prosecutors attend a "mandatory orientation call for all participating offices." FJP insisted the prosecutors meet face-to-face with the new recruits (hectoring Boudin during the pandemic when he neglected to do so) and required the offices to assist the law students in actual "policy reform work" such as "[a]ddressing police misconduct and racial injustice."

FJP also used the network to recruit job candidates for higher-level positions in various prosecutors offices, such as those of Becton and Descano. This relationship was reciprocal: in addition to Prosecution Leaders of Now and hiring Kollar, FJP twice reached out to its network to identify recruits for its own organization.

FJP also invited its network of prosecutors to join the Vera Institute's "Motion for Justice Campaign," which would "center racial equity in transforming the prosecutor's role in partnership with 10 prosecutor's offices and community-based organizations across the nation." Participating prosecutors pledged "to reducing racial disparities in case outcomes by at least 20% through implementing the Motion for Justice framework." The Vera Institute, meanwhile, provided "assistance with data analysis, staff training, community engagement, and policy support."

3 Soros & the Prosecutors: How He Funds Them

Documents obtained by the MRC revealed that Soros-funded groups tied to leftist FJP actively coordinated meetings with 123 of the 126 Soros prosecutors from states across the U.S. In total, a whopping 30 percent of America's population currently lives under the jurisdiction of a Soros prosecutor.

The prosecutors' goal is to further FJP's far-left agenda, which is aligned with the Soros vision. Politico was correct when it reported in 2016 that Soros planned to "overhaul" the American criminal justice system.

FJP is a fiscally sponsored project of the leftist grantmaking Tides Center, which serves as an incubation hub for liberal activist groups. Those operations focus on major initiatives such as the Marxist Black Lives Matter movement, defunding the police, climate change radicalism, abortion, feminist activism and anti-Semitism.

Soros has given $77,663,316 to Soros groups working directly with Soros prosecutors. This includes the Tides Center, which he gave at least $14,235,421 between 2016 and 2022 alone. He also directly gave FJP a $10,000 grant in 2019 through that same dark money behemoth.

The Tides board of directors "has full governing authority, and full legal and fiduciary responsibility, for all fiscally sponsored projects, employees, and activities," according to its website, which would include FJP. Tides-sponsored projects are also required to have at "least one full-time employee who will be employed through Tides." Tides Center's staff also "monitors and maintains" the administrative activities — everything from finances to payroll.

The result is a broad network of prosecutors who are repeatedly and actively coordinating with and following directives from FJP to fulfill its goals and — by extension — those of the Soros-funded Tides Center.

The radicalism of both Soros and the Tides network cannot be understated. Even leftist Politico conceded that the elder Soros and Tides Center's sister organization — Tides Foundation — were among the core financial backers of the anti-Semitic and pro-Hamas protesters stirring up chaos on college campuses. Two other fiscally sponsored projects of Tides Center — The Palestine Legal Center (PLC) and the Adalah Justice Project (AJP) — were mentioned as taking active roles in the protests, with the AJP taking part in the out-of-control Columbia University pro-Hamas demonstrations.

Given Tides' explicit extremism, it is unnerving that one of its pet projects is so deeply embedded within the offices of prosecutors Soros' money has helped elect.

Consider Soros-backed former Loudoun County Commonwealth's Attorney Buta Biberaj, who became notorious for targeting the father of a minor who was sexually assaulted in school. Biberaj boldly praised FJP's Krinsky as "the backbone to a lot of what we have done in our office with the commonwealth attorney's — Virginia and throughout the U.S.," according to a 2021 interview with Krinsky. Biberaj lost her bid for reelection in November 2023.

Krinsky's push to abolish the death penalty for convicted terrorists is the type of policy she pushes to her network. She co-wrote an op-ed in 2021 along with Soros-backed Arlington County, Virginia, Commonwealth Attorney Parisa Dehghani-Tafti and then-Soros-tied District of Columbia Attorney General Karl Racine advocating against capital punishment for the notorious Boston Bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev.

“While the acts committed by Tsarnaev were indeed horrific, we embrace the thinking espoused by then-candidate Joe Biden, who pledged to eliminate the death penalty — a process plagued by racial disparities and wrongful convictions of the innocent,” the authors wrote. In 2013, Tsarnaev was involved in the detonation of a pair of homemade bombs in a crowd watching the Boston Marathon, killing three and injuring “more than 260” people.

Krinsky seems to have a penchant for shilling on behalf of mass murderers. Another April 2022 NBC News op-ed by Krinsky, Dehghani-Tafti and then-King County, Seattle Prosecuting Attorney Dan Satterberg complained that the state of Florida was seeking the death penalty for the man who murdered seventeen people (mostly children) at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School. “We’re well past the time for quibbling over how to kill. Now it’s time to grapple, once and for all, with if we kill. And the answer must be a resounding no,” the authors pontificated.

But abolishing the death penalty isn’t Krinsky’s only focus. Apparently, advocating on behalf of drug dens is also a feature of the FJP priority list. An October 2021 USA Today op-ed co-written by Krinsky and Philadelphia County District Attorney Larry Krasner demanded Biden “lead the way” by instructing the Department of Justice not to penalize those who “provide a safe space for people to use” drugs.

One of the main functions of FJP is to fight against “tough on crime” policies across many states, which fits right in line with the Soros brand and the agenda of the soft-on-crime prosecutors he’s financed.

At least four Soros-backed prosecutors sit on FJP’s advisory board, including one of Soros’s most notorious DAs, Los Angeles County, California District Attorney George Gascón. At least three other leftist groups — two of which are explicitly Soros-funded — were involved in coordination with Soros DAs on how to overhaul U.S. law using FJP’s vision. Those include: The racially charged Vera Institute for Justice and the Progressive Prosecutors’ Alliance of California (PPAC), another fiscally sponsored project by Tides Center’s sister Soros-funded organization Tides Advocacy, which was formed by Gascón.

The PAC specifically notes in its “About Us” page that it is “guided by the ‘21 Principles for the 21st Century Prosecutor’ developed by” FJP, in addition to other Soros-funded groups like the Brennan Center for Justice and The Justice Collaborative.

FJP’s views are extreme. The group has advocated to raise the age of criminal responsibility in order to have young adults 18-24 who commit felonies then tried in juvenile court. It has openly defended sex changes for children and has pushed for defunding police departments. The organization has effectively taken Soros’s anti-American open society worldview and made it its guiding principle.

“More significant changes to young adult prosecutions and sentences can also be achieved through raising the age of criminal responsibility,” argued the FJP in one disturbing January 2019 “Issues” brief.

The organization celebrated how liberal states were actively taking measures to increase their respective criminal responsibility ages in order to reduce the incarceration of felons (such as in Vermont). Statistics on violent crime put FJP’s radical views into perspective. The Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention documented 429,470 “violent crime” arrests for individuals “18 and older” in the year 2020 alone nationwide.

Eleven-thousand five-hundred and ten of those arrests were made for “Murder and nonnegligent manslaughter.” Another 362,050 of those “arrests” were for “aggravated assault” and 55,900 arrests were for “robbery.” FJP argues that a sizable number of those cases should be tried in juvenile court. This is similar to the German model of justice advocated by FJP, where the “vast majority” of young adults detained for violent offenses such as murder and rape are given light sentences, “as German courts tend to view it as beneficial to society to keep these young people in the juvenile system, which is particularly focused on rehabilitation.”

FJP also defends the practice of sex changes for children against new restrictions. In June 2021, FJP spearheaded a joint statement signed by 76 leftist elected prosecutors and law enforcement officials from across the United States supposedly to “condemn the ongoing efforts to criminalize transgender people and gender-affirming healthcare across the country.”

FJP got more specific and disturbing on page two. “Among these concerning restrictions are bills that aim to block trans youth from receiving life-saving gender-affirming healthcare,” according to the statement.

In addition, two other Soros-funded organizations — the Law Enforcement Action Partnership (LEAP) and the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives (NOBLE) — were also signatories. LEAP and NOBLE received $1,030,000 and $119,000 respectively from Soros between 2016 and 2022.

Over 70 Criminal Justice Leaders Condemn the Criminalization of Transgender People and Gender-Affirming Healthcare

Elected prosecutors and law enforcement leaders say legislation discriminating against trans people harms public safety and pledge to not use limited resources to criminalize gender-affirming healthcare

Today, 73 elected prosecutors and law enforcement leaders — including Attorneys General, District Attorneys and law enforcement heads, as well as Law Enforcement Action Partnership and the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives — issued a joint statement condemning efforts by state legislatures across the country to criminalize transgender people and gender-affirming healthcare. In 2021 alone, at least 105 bills that discriminate against transgender people have been proposed in 34 states and 10 have become law. The signatories emphasize that these efforts are a threat to public safety, serve no legitimate purpose and erode trust that is critical to protecting all members of our community.

A draft copy of an FJP pledge signed by Soros prosecutors, LEAP and NOBLE.

FJP is also very much involved in the radical defund-the-police movement, another feature of the Soros brand of criminal justice. Soros reportedly spent at least a whopping $35 million fueling anti-police groups and causes just in the year 2021 alone.

FJP defended the racial unrest sparked by the Marxist Black Lives Matter and Antifa movements spurred on by the killing of George Floyd in 2020 and smeared the American criminal justice system as being systemically racist. “[P]eople have taken to the streets to loudly speak the names of those who have died at the hands of police violence and demand that the systemic racism embedded into policing and our criminal justice system” be “reckoned with,” FJP decried.

One of FJP’s policy recommendations for its “New Vision For Justice” directly calls for state and local officials to defund their respective police departments and reallocate the resources elsewhere.

A number of high-profile prosecutors from across the country also collaborated on Krinsky’s 2022 left-wing legal book titled, “Change From Within: Reimagining the 21st Century Prosecutor,” which might as well serve as the guide for aspiring attorneys to further the Soros brand to overhaul the American criminal justice system.

Several radical Soros-backed prosecutors like Boudin, Foxx, and Krasner were listed among the contributors to Krinsky’s book. Dehghani-Tafti was also a contributor.

Each prosecutor was tasked with writing their own chapters documenting their journey to the pinnacle of so-called “justice.” Most were either condemning American police as systemically racist, praising efforts to not enforce immigration laws, advocating for government-sanctioned “safe injection sites” for drugs, or even praising convicted murderers.

Each chapter of the book was prefaced by artwork by felons, including convicted murderer Luis “Suave” Gonzalez, who was sentenced in 1988 to “mandatory life imprisonment for the murder of a 13-year-old boy” when he was 17, according to The Financial Times. He was released in 2017.

One of the more notable entries came from Boudin, who spent a portion of his chapter praising his parents, both convicted murderers and members of the terrorist group Weather Underground, as having “modeled good values and behavior.” “Realizing That Good People Do Bad Things,” read the sub-header for Boudin’s section on his parents. Boudin then actually tried to make his parents look like victims of a punitive system that strips criminals away from their children:

“So many children in our system are deprived of their parents due to incarceration, and, as a result, are deprived of the opportunity to be successful. And that’s because of some mistake their parents made and our society’s punitive response, a response that typically harms far more than just the person who committed the crime.”

Both parents were participants in the notorious 1981 Brink’s robbery in Rockland County, New York, which resulted in two police officers and an armored truck security guard being killed. But somehow, Boudin came to “recognize their tremendous love for me, for each other, for humanity.”

According to the New York Post, “Boudin’s vision of ‘radical change to how we envision justice,’ included ‘prohibitions on seeking cash bail, prosecuting juveniles as adults and seeking tougher sentences under California’s anti-gang or ‘three strikes’ laws.’” The result, according to National Review in 2022, was San Francisco witnessing a “surge of shoplifting, an increase in homelessness and drug overdoses, and rising reports of anti-Asian hate crimes, car break-ins, and burglaries and thefts.” The societal upheaval eventually led to a recall vote that ousted Boudin from office.

Boudin exclaimed how he “loved and really valued and learned a lot from my time in Venezuela because of the politics there,” which is telling given his radical approach to law enforcement in which condemning the American criminal justice system is a key feature. This apparently was too extreme even by Krinsky’s standards, since Boudin’s pro-Venezuela rant was nixed from her book entirely.

One FJP book contributor, Krasner, actually compared his soft-on-crime initiative to Martin Luther King Jr.’s Civil Rights Movement. “Those committed to progressive prosecution and reform are part of a great social movement,” Krasner wrote. “It’s very, very gritty on the inside, and yet the daily fight, the slog, the battle — it’s so rewarding.” He concluded: “I mean, we ain’t King, that is for sure, but we’re taking a lot of heat, and we’re taking a lot of hate.” Heritage Foundation Senior Legal Fellows Charles Stimson and Zack Smith noted in 2023 that crime had in fact “exploded” under Krasner’s leadership in Philadelphia County with his “pro-criminal policies.” In effect, Stimson and Smith wrote at the time, “Murders are up 63%. Shootings are up 78%.”

Krasner received $1.7 million from the elder Soros during his first office run, and an additional $1.26 million for his reelection campaign, The Daily Signal analyzed.

4 Soros & the Prosecutors: How They Go Down

From 2022 to 2024, at least 13 Soros prosecutors lost or gave up their offices as they were held to account for long records of negligence, bad choices and radicalism. At least five were defeated at the ballot box. Three were removed or suspended from office for publicly committing to not do their jobs. Five resigned while under investigation, and one is battling her criminal conviction. Another prosecutor agreed not to run for reelection after several scandals.

There were two particular themes as the DAs pledged to oppose laws restricting child gender transitioning and laws protecting the unborn from abortion. Twelve of these 13 DAs signed a statement promising not to enforce laws protecting children from chemical castration and genital mutilation, what some leftists erroneously call “life-saving gender-affirming care.” Overall, 63 Soros prosecutors signed this statement.

Nine of the 13 DA’s also openly opposed restrictions on abortion, even though the pledges they signed made no mention of weeks or trimesters, effectively leaving babies unprotected up to the moment of birth. 65 total Soros prosecutors signed this statement. These pro-abortion DAs frequently use euphemisms such as “reproductive rights” and “abortion care.” Kim Foxx even claimed “access” to abortion as a right.

Five Soros prosecutors — Warren, Colorado Twelfth Judicial DA Alonzo Payne, Nueces County District Attorney Mark Gonzalez, Suffolk County District Attorney Rachael Rollins and St. Louis District Attorney Kim Gardner elected to resign when their misdeeds caught up with them.

Gonzalez left office rather than attend a hearing to answer for both putting Soros’s soft-on-crime vision into action and simply being bad at his job. Gonzalez declined to prosecute almost three out of four cases over a three-year period. He also repeatedly let offenders off the hook for violating their parole. In one case, an offender who should have been behind bars was accused of murder, and in another the defendant reportedly had 150 parole violations.

Gonzalez, who has the words “Not Guilty” tattooed across his chest, was suspended by court order after “allegations of absenteeism, abuse of case dismissals and advertisement of Gonzalez’s restaurant in his capacity as the district attorney.”

A separate judge found “credible evidence of gross incompetence” by Gonzalez after his office tasked the mother of a murder victim with sorting and boxing the evidence (including crime scene photos). That assignment meant removing the evidence from the attorney’s office and bringing it to her house. This jeopardized the mother’s ability to be called as a witness and compromised the integrity of the investigation.

In an unrelated case, Gonzalez’s office ignored two separate reports from police documenting a violent felon “continuously violat[ing] his probation,” including by dragging a woman with her car. After eight months of Gonzalez sitting on those documents, the felon shot and murdered two people.

Gonzalez chose to blame everyone but himself for the negative attention this brought him saying that the “future of our democracy” rested on whether he could survive his scandals.

Rachael Rollins also resigned under investigation. After being appointed the U.S. attorney for Massachusetts by Biden, Rollins allegedly leaked “non-public, sensitive DOJ information” about another prosecutor to create the false impression he was going to be federally indicted. Purportedly, Rollins did this to sway the special election to choose her successor as Suffolk County DA.

Rollins has been disbarred and cannot even return to private practice. A May 2023 Inspector General report included that Rollins, “[V]iolated federal regulations, numerous DOJ policies, her Ethics Agreement, and applicable law, and fell far short of the standards of professionalism and judgment that the Department should expect of any employee, much less a U.S. Attorney.”

Rollins frequently touted her connections to both FJP and other FJP-aligned Soros prosecutors, referring to them and herself as the “Justice League” at least nine times on X. As a self-proclaimed member of the Justice League, Rollins has opposed life without parole for legal adults and signed a petition against cooperation among ICE and state and local law enforcement.

The Boston Police Patrolman's Association condemned Rollins for posting that "we are being killed at will by the police," and "No more words: Demand action," during the massive, violent riots of 2020. Rollins's response made no mention of the violence, as she responded with a racist dig at the organization members' "white fragility." Rollins even reposted a post quoting her minimizing damage done during the 2020 riots.

As St. Louis Circuit Attorney, Soros-backed Kim Gardner was fined and reprimanded for her conduct during the politicized (and ultimately unsuccessful) prosecution of Republican Governor Eric Greitens.

Top: Former Navy Seal and Missouri Governor Eric Greitens; Bottom: Former St. Louis County District Attorney Kim Gardner

Gardner also made headlines for going after a couple for holding weapons in front of their home after rioters broke into their gated community during the 2020 riots. Beyond this, Gardner helped write an article referring to former President Donald Trump's calls for "law and order" during the 2020 riots as "white supremacy."

In 2021, she posted about her partnership with the radical Vera Institute of Justice, writing, "My office is proud to be part of this initiative." Gardner has also boasted about drastically reducing the prison population in St. Louis.

Gardner frequently supported releasing prisoners, often using COVID-19 as an excuse. She promoted a March 17, 2020, FJP post advocating for the release of prisoners during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Two of the Soros prosecutors ultimately lost their jobs for either declaring their intent not to enforce the law or actually doing so in practice. Former Hillsborough County State Attorney Andrew Warren signed two separate FJP petitions pledging not to do his job before Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis removed him from office. Former Orange and Osceola County State Attorney Monique Worrell was suspended by DeSantis for routinely limiting child pornography charges in defiance of the law.

Warren also lashed out in an article and on social media when Osceola County State Attorney Monique Worrell met the same fate, calling her suspension for limiting charges for possession of child pornography an "attack on democracy."

Worrell, who like Warren, signed a petition agreeing not to enforce laws on abortion, proudly posted about her decision to speak to a radical pro-abortion group, Ruth's List. She also made sure to repost FJP's defense of her time in office.

Several other FJP prosecutors were held accountable by their voters and lost elections in such progressive areas as San Francisco, Loudoun County, Va., Portland and Baltimore.

San Francisco District Attorney Chesa Boudin was defeated in a recall election. Boudin, the son of Weather Underground terrorists, pushed FJP's agenda on drugs. In a promotion of an FJP post on the issue, Boudin insisted on the necessity of "safe consumption sites."

Former Loudoun County Commonwealth Attorney Buta Biberaj was defeated by a Republican when she sought reelection in deep-blue Loudoun County in 2023. While simultaneously refusing to enforce many "nonviolent" offenses, CA Biberaj prosecuted Loudoun County parent Scott Smith for arguing at a school board meeting with the school administrators who covered-up the rape of his daughter.

Her advocacy for abortion is so unconditional that she complained on X (then Twitter) that an alleged rapist had been arrested for transporting his underage victim to Oregon to get an abortion.

Another Soros DA crashed and burned so badly that he failed to win reelection in liberal Portland, Oregon. Former Multnomah County District Attorney Mike Schmidt was defeated on May 21. Schmidt distinguished himself as too radical for Portland by suggesting the decriminalization of knowingly giving other people AIDS. Schmidt also supported releasing criminals during the COVID-19 pandemic, calling it “public safety to get people out of incarceration.”

San Joaquin County District Attorney Verber Salazar and Harris County District Attorney Kimberly Ogg were also defeated in elections.

Former Baltimore City State’s Attorney Marilyn Mosby lost not only her job, but also was ultimately convicted of crimes. She was defeated in the Democratic primary in 2022. Mosby was convicted of perjury and mortgage fraud and was given a sentence that did not include jail time, but rather a year of home detention, though she is appealing it.

Then-Baltimore State’s Attorney Marilyn Mosby (center)

Mosby also proclaimed her dedication to following FJP’s orders. The disgraced former Baltimore City State’s Attorney promoted an FJP pledge to not prosecute abortionists, regardless of state laws protecting the lives of the unborn. She also dutifully promoted FJP Executive Director Miriam Krinsky’s extreme views on sentencing.

Finally, Cook County State’s Attorney Kim Foxx continues to hold office despite being criticized by the former mayor, declining to file charges in gang shootouts and handing out a misdemeanor for the death of a baby. Foxx has agreed not to run for another term.

Soros-backed Foxx used her position as Cook County state’s attorney to pressure Illinois legislators into eliminating cash bail. She also repeatedly attempted to erase the charges against infamous hate hoaxer Jussie Smollett. Additionally, Foxx has stated her opposition to prosecuting known HIV transmission, boasted about using her position to promote DEI in her office and promoted the work of FJP.

Many of the Soros prosecutors, including Bragg and Ellison, attempted to hide the record of their collusion with Soros groups. One DA even went so far as to submit a false statement to his attorney general.

In her communications, Krinsky frequently reiterated that the coordination between Soros prosecutors and FJP were only for prosecutors and their “senior staff,” and were “not intended for broader dissemination.” Dutifully following her instructions, several of the Soros prosecutors have disregarded state public records laws to try and hide their communications from investigators.

Ellison, for example, blatantly ignored the Minnesota Government Data Practices Act (MGDPA)’s and refused to produce anything after the MRC’s lawful request. Similarly, Bragg has yet to produce any of his or Vance’s communications in the year since he was obligated to do so under the New York Freedom of Information Law (FOIL).

Creuzot, though, took this tactic several steps further. Through attorney Ricardo Vela, Creuzot’s office swore to the Office of the Attorney General (ironically, Ken Paxton) that his communications with the other members of the Texas Five were “made for the purpose of providing legal services” and protected by attorney-client privilege. For this reason, the Office of the Attorney General — which had not seen the communications — concluded that they did not need to be disclosed under the Texas Public Information Act (PIA).

These communications were intended to be, and have remained, confidential communications between the elected prosecutors. Therefore, the withheld communications should be excepted from required disclosure as attorney-client communications under Texas Rule of Evidence 503 and section 552.107 of the Texas Government Code.

Alternatively, the District Attorney’s Office asserts that the information requested contains information considered to be confidential by law, and therefore, must be withheld. See Tex. For these reasons, the District Attorney’s Office seeks a determination that the requested email communications are and will remain excepted from disclosure pursuant to Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 192.5, Texas Rules of Evidence 503, and sections 552.101, 552.106, 552.107, 552.108, 552.111, and 552.137 of the Texas Government Code. Through his attorney Ricardo Vela, Dallas County DA John Creuzot falsely attested to the Attorney General that his communications with the Texas Five were “made for the purposes of providing legal services.”

The MRC was able to obtain the documents elsewhere, and they show unequivocally that what Creuzot’s office represented to the attorney general was false. As the above passages detailed, the communications dealt not with “legal services,” but instead political strategy, communications, lobbying of the Texas legislature and complaints about Kim Ogg and “the Dallas Morning Snooze.”

CONCLUSION

The American justice system was designed to protect the people from lawbreakers. Soros and his son have upended this system by deploying radicalized prosecutors who target the very people they are supposed to protect.

The Media Research Center spent a full year pursuing this story. MRC gathered 7,785 pages of communications that would not have been released otherwise. Emails, text messages, chats and more, but all adding up to the same broken legal system America now endures.

But those aren't the only numbers. Try $117 million. That's at least how much Soros has spent in the last few years building this network and getting prosecutors elected to execute the Soros agenda. These prosecutors disregard felonies, downplay the extent of crime and pursue vendettas against political opponents — even a recent president of the United States.

These same prosecutors sit in safety, with armed guards nearby — in courthouses, or office buildings — or take junkets around the U.S. or even around the world, all to further the toxic legal theories of George Soros and now his “more political” son Alex.

Their prosecutors have one priority, pushing the Soros agenda. And that agenda threatens justice and American values while making everyone — including the general public and Soros's political opponents — less safe.

Recommendations: MRC has several recommendations for how media outlets and elected officials can better address how George and Alex Soros use their empire against America.

- The Media Must Do a Better Job Covering Crime and Its Origins:

The Soros empire is massively involved in changing the legal system of the United States. Yet, most media outlets rarely cover Soros's “reform prosecutors” and the harm they have wrought.

- Reporters Should Do Some Genuine Journalism and Investigate the Soros Operation:

George and Alex Soros are two of the most influential figures in American and global politics. Yet, the legacy media coverage of their operations is scant.

- Congress Needs to Get Involved:

Since the Biden-Harris administration will not take action, Congress must investigate how the Soros empire wields power over prosecutors. The Senate should also refuse to confirm any additional nominees to the DOJ or the Federal bench until legal action is taken against the Soros machine.

- Governors and State Attorneys General Need to Get Involved:

Governors and state attorneys general should remove law-breaking prosecutors. Where appropriate, AGs should also bring RICO-like charges against the Soros machine and his prosecutors.

- Private attorneys and other individuals must get involved, too:

Because the Soros prosecutors have violated numerous laws and ethics rules, complaints can and should be filed with the appropriate bar associations.
